

Greed

“Mine”.

Greed is taking “mine” to an extreme; the extreme is set by a point of view and varies accordingly. Everybody has “mine” as the justifier of free will to look out for their self; it includes thought as well as material possession.

A friend once argued that Greed, instead of ‘Rule overrules God’, was the root cause of all the problems of the world. He has a prejudice against the word God and was immediately turned off to any possibility of understanding me. I could construct a definition of Greed with the possession of thought as the base that would make them the same idea, but it would be too cumbersome for my purpose and is not what he was talking about.

This recent insight came in answer to my seeking to understand the resistance to the idea I’m presenting. Greed is the culprit two times with the fear of change taking things that are “mine” and the challenge to ideas that are “mine”, relative to ones definition of “the way it is”.

The first, fear of material loss is fairly simple; change is only allowed when able to dictate how, when and where, not to affect “mine”. The thought part of Greed is the framework of the shield against the Fear of the Unknown, “this is the way it is”, knowledge that is “mine”.

Any one with close to normal intelligence can understand the basic idea, establishing a common link in the minds of mankind to create a higher consciousness. Fear of change is the only reason it is not accepted as possible.

Possible is all it is, it has to be made to happen, but it is possible. Change, it’s scary, but if you look around the world today and you aren’t scared by the way mankind is headed then you are wrapped up in “mine”.
